PETUNIA Plays DETECTIVE

"What are you going to be when you grow up, Petunia?" Bugs Bunny asked one day, when the Secret Six Club was meeting in Porky Pig's garage.

Bugs, himself, had said that he intended to be a policeman. Porky wanted to be a fireman, Daffy Duck, an explorer, Sniffles, a cheese maker and Little Blabbermouse, an aviator. Now it was Petunia's turn.

"I'm going to be a detective," she said firmly.

The other five members of the Secret Six shouted with laughter.

"You're crazy, Petunia," Bugs cried, loudly munching a carrot. "No one ever heard of a girl detective. Detectives wear badges, and they wouldn't give a badge to a silly girl."

"You just wait and see," Petunia told them and flounced out of the garage, away from their jeering laughter.

That evening, as she was hurrying homeward through the winter dusk, Petunia's chubby legs quickened into a run when she passed the old, deserted Hawkins house, standing forlornly on a knoll at the end of the street.

No one had lived in the house for years. Its shutters hung crookedly from the broken glass of its windows, and its warped front steps staggered upward to the sagging boards of the dilapidated porch. In the chilly darkness of the early evening, it looked like a sad bedraggled ghost of a house.

Suddenly, as Petunia glanced up at the old house, a faint glimmer of light shone behind one of the downstairs windows. Then it disappeared, leaving only the blackness of the cobwebby pane.

Petunia stopped and stared in startled amazement. Never before had she seen a light in the empty house. While she was watching, the dim glow flashed again. Then the windows were blank and dark once more.

Petunia raced down the street to Porky's house.

"Come quick!" she whispered, when Porky opened the door. "I want to show you something."

Together, they rushed toward the old Hawkins house, while Petunia breathlessly explained about the lights.

Clasping hands, they stood on the sidewalk in front of the house, waiting and watching the downstairs windows. They waited and waited in an excited silence. But no light appeared.

"You m-must-a b-been im-imaginin' you s-saw l-lights, P-Petunia," Porky stuttered finally.

But Petunia was sure that the brief flashes had been real.

"Maybe we'd better tell someone about them," she suggested.

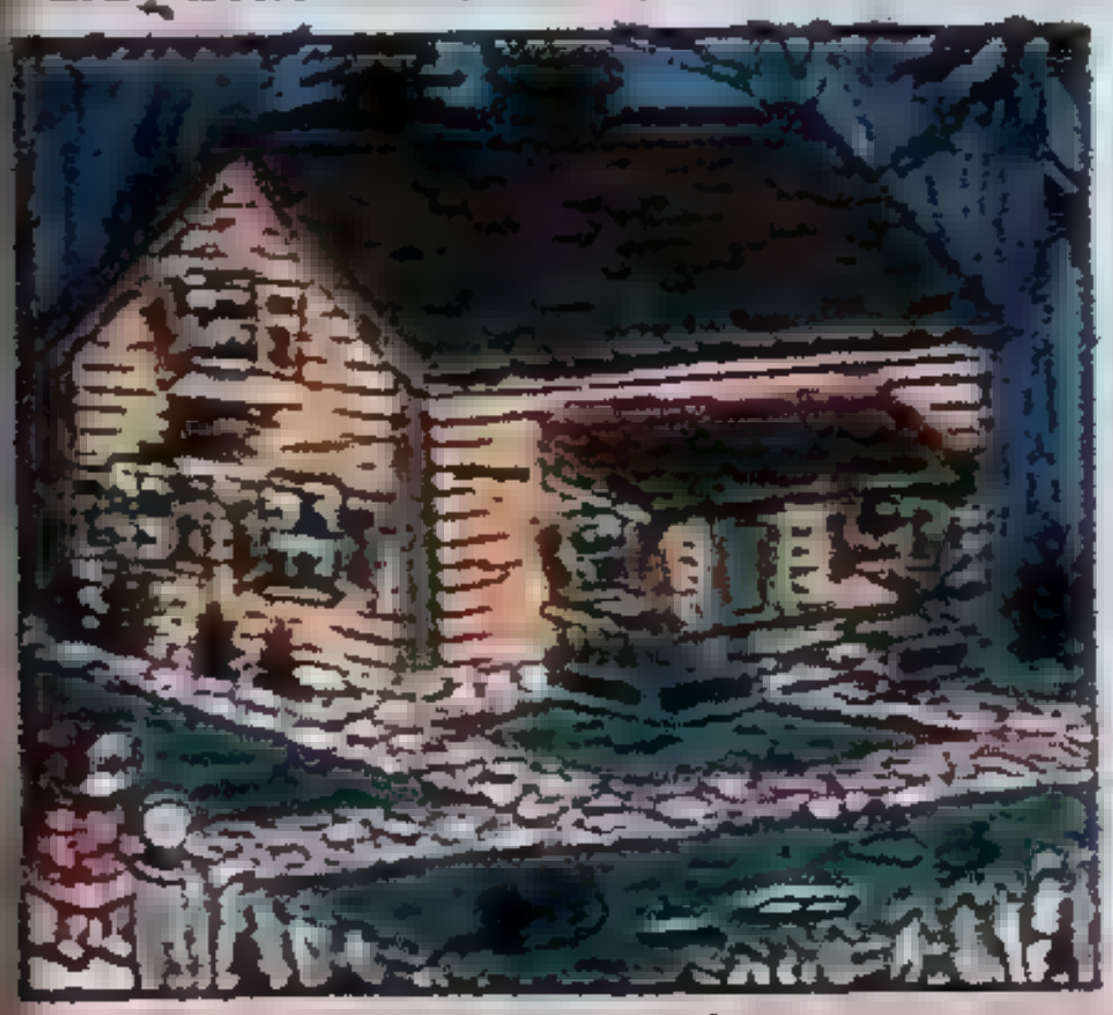
But Porky only laughed. "F-Folks'll think you're c-crazy, s-seein' l-lights in that o-old, em-empty h-house," he told her.

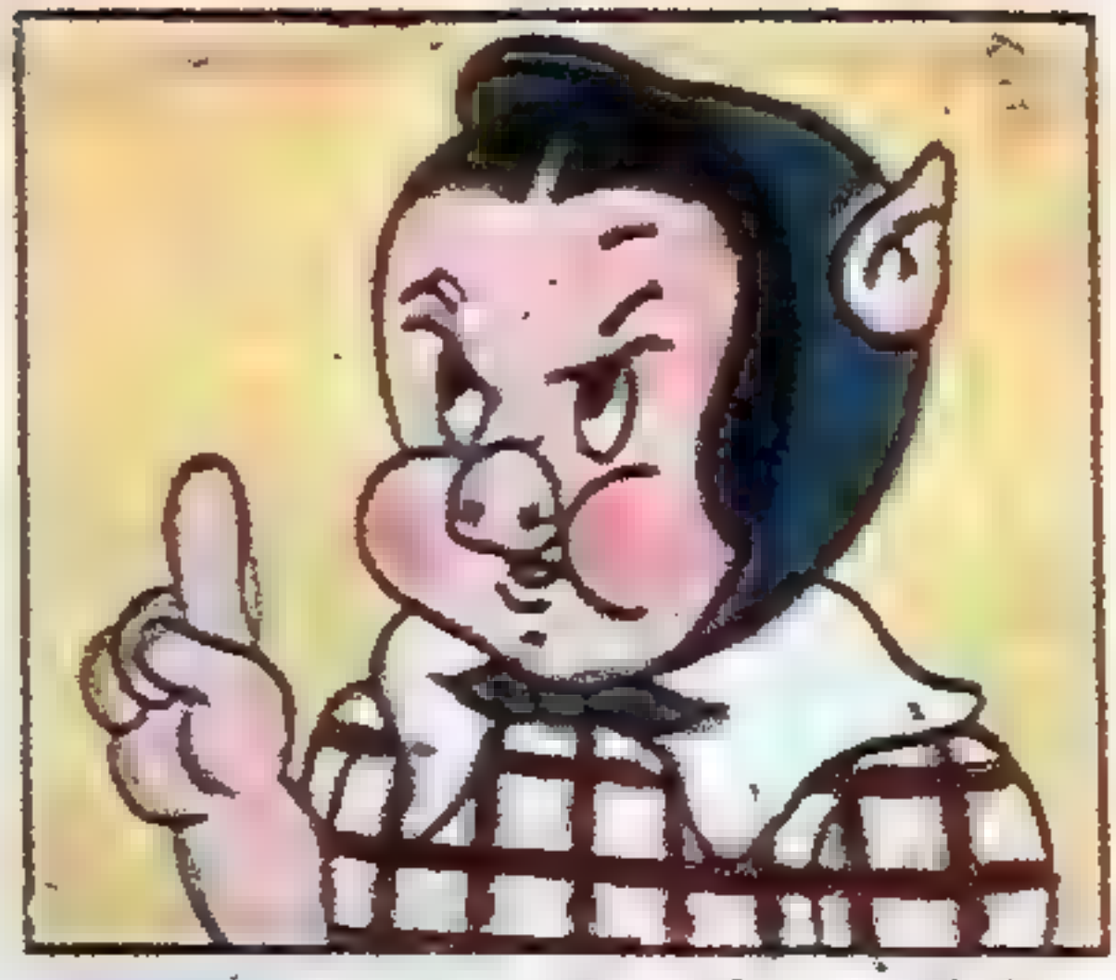
"Maybe we'd better go in and look, ourselves," Petunia gulped, pretending to be very brave.

"D-Don't be s-silly," Porky stammered quickly, looking warily at the dark gloom of the old house. "You j-just thought you s-saw lights. You'd b-better f-forget a-about it." He tugged Petunia along the sidewalk, away from the house.

But Petunia did not forget about the lights. All night, until she fell asleep, she thought about them.

Early the next morning she hurried to the old house. In the bright light of day it did not look scary. It was just a sad, empty, old house, standing all alone among the bare, wintry trees.





"Porky can laugh all he pleases. I'll show him that I wasn't just imagining those lights," she muttered to herself. "I'm going into the house and look around. If I'm going to be a detective, I've got to be brave."

So, gathering all her courage, she walked slowly up the weed-grown path to the rickety front steps. She stopped again before the warped front door, hanging loosely on its rusty hinges. Finally she pushed open the door and peered into the dark hall.

A cold rush of dank, musty air greeted her. But there was no sound or sign of life, nothing except dirt and dust and cobwebs.

Slowly, on tiptoe, little Petunia walked across the hall toward a half-open door which led into one of the front rooms. Timidly she peered inside.

Except for a pile of tattered old blankets on the floor, the room was as empty and deserted as the hall.

Then, suddenly, the blankets moved and a pale, pinched little face appeared. Two dark, frightened eyes stared up at Petunia.

"Who are you and what are you doing here?" a weak little voice asked.

Petunia gasped and her heart stopped pounding. The stranger, buried in the torn blankets, was only a youngster, like herself.

"I'm Petunia Pig," she said. "I saw a light in here last night, so I came to investigate. You made the light, didn't you?"

"Yes. With matches. To see my bed," the stranger whispered. "You won't give me away, will you? You won't tell anyone I'm here, will you?" There were tears of fear and pleading in his eyes, and his voice quivered.

"Of course, I won't," Petunia cried in a rush of sympathy. "But why are you sleeping here in this old, cold house?"

"I'm hiding," the choked voice answered. "My father's been dead a long time, and my mother died last week. I heard the neighbors say that they were going to put me in an orphan asylum, so I ran away. You won't tell anyone where I am, will you?"

"What's your name?" Petunia asked suddenly.

"Peter Pig."

"Peter Pig!" Petunia exclaimed. "Why, they're hunting all over for you. The man on the radio said so and it's in the newspapers. Your aunt wants you to live with her. You won't have to go to an orphan asylum. Let's hurry and find your aunt, Peter. She's probably with the police, hunting for you."

When little, half-starved Peter, led by Petunia, reached the police station, they found Peter's anxious aunt waiting for him. Petunia watched the pleasant-faced woman put kind, motherly arms around trembling, hungry Peter. Then she turned away.

"Good work, Petunia," the smiling police captain said. "You oughta be a detective."

"Can girls be detectives and have badges?" she asked eagerly.

"Of course," the captain smiled. "Would you like a badge? You deserve one for finding Peter Pig."

"Oh, I'd love a badge," Petunia whispered, her eyes shining.

So the police captain pinned a shiny badge on her dress.

"Wait till the Secret Six sees this!" Petunia laughed happily and skipped away to find Porky, Bugs, Daffy, Sniffles, and Little Blabbermouse.

Never again did the members of the Secret Six laugh when Petunia said that she was going to be a real detective.

WHILE HUNTING IN THE JUNGLE, LITTLE INKY SUDDENLY STOPS STILL AND LISTENS. SOMETHING IS COMING DOWN THE TRAIL.

INKY SCOOTS BEHIND A TREE TO WAIT—PERHAPS IT WILL BE SOMETHING HE CAN CHASE. PEERING CAUTIOUSLY AROUND THE TREE, HE SEES ONLY A BLACK CROW WALK SLOWLY BY.

AHA!

DISAPPOINTED, INKY STARTS OFF AGAIN AND COMES UPON A BABY LION, PLAYING HAPPILY WITH A VINE. INKY RAISES HIS SPEAR...

HUH?

AND BRINGS IT TO HIS SHOULDER FOR THE THROW, WHEN SUDDENLY SOMETHING GRABS IT.

GRRRRRRR

GULP! GULP!

INKY TURNS AROUND, FACE TO FACE WITH A GREAT, BIG PAPA LION!

INKY IS OFF LIKE THE WIND WITH THE PAIR OF LION ON HIS HEELS. ON AND ON RUNS THE LION - BUT NOT INKY. HE HAS HOODED IN A HOLLOW STUMP...

GRRRR - I'LL GET YOU YET!

AND NOW INKY OUT TO SEE RAISES HIS HEAD TO SEE IF THE COAST IS CLEAR. PERCHED ON HIS HEAD IS - THE CROW!

WHEW! THAT WAS POWERFUL CLOSE BUT AH GUESS THAT BAD OLD LION IS GONE NOW!

THE CROW JUMPS OFF INKY'S HEAD AND SOLEMNLY WALKS AWAY. INKY STALKS THE BIRD AND THE LION, WHO HAS DISCOVERED HE WAS FOOLED, STALKS INKY.

AHM GONNA GET HIM, THIS TIME - HE AIN'T AGONNA SIT ON MAH HAID AGAIN - NO SIRREE!

YOU GET HIM, AND I'LL GET YOU BOTH - YOU'RE NOT GOING TO FOOL ME AGAIN!

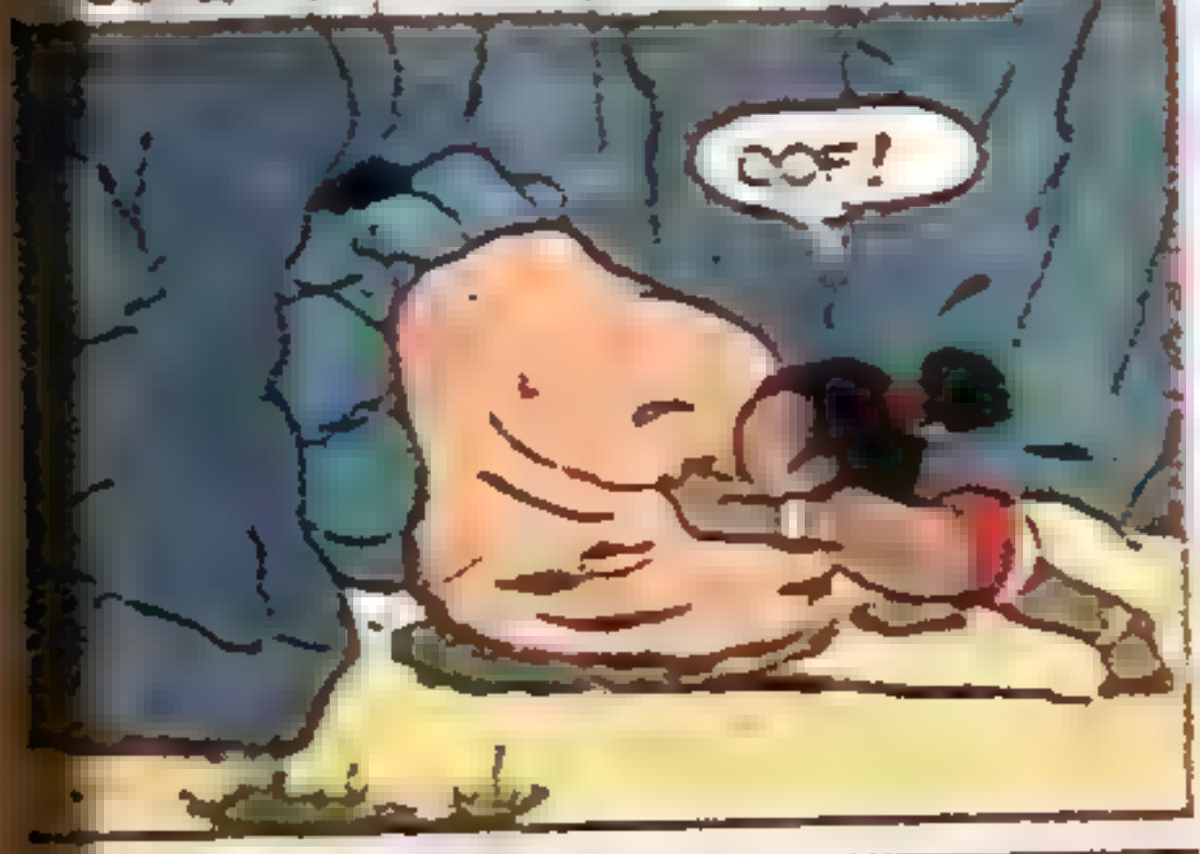
THE CROW LEADS THE WAY INTO A CAVE. BUT CLEVER INKY DOES NOT FOLLOW. PLANNING TO KEEP THE BIRD PRISONER, HE CLOSES UP THE CAVE OPENING WITH ROCKS. INKY REACHES FOR JUST ONE MORE ROCK AND FINDS HIS HANDS ON THE LION!

NICE DOG, ISN'T IT?

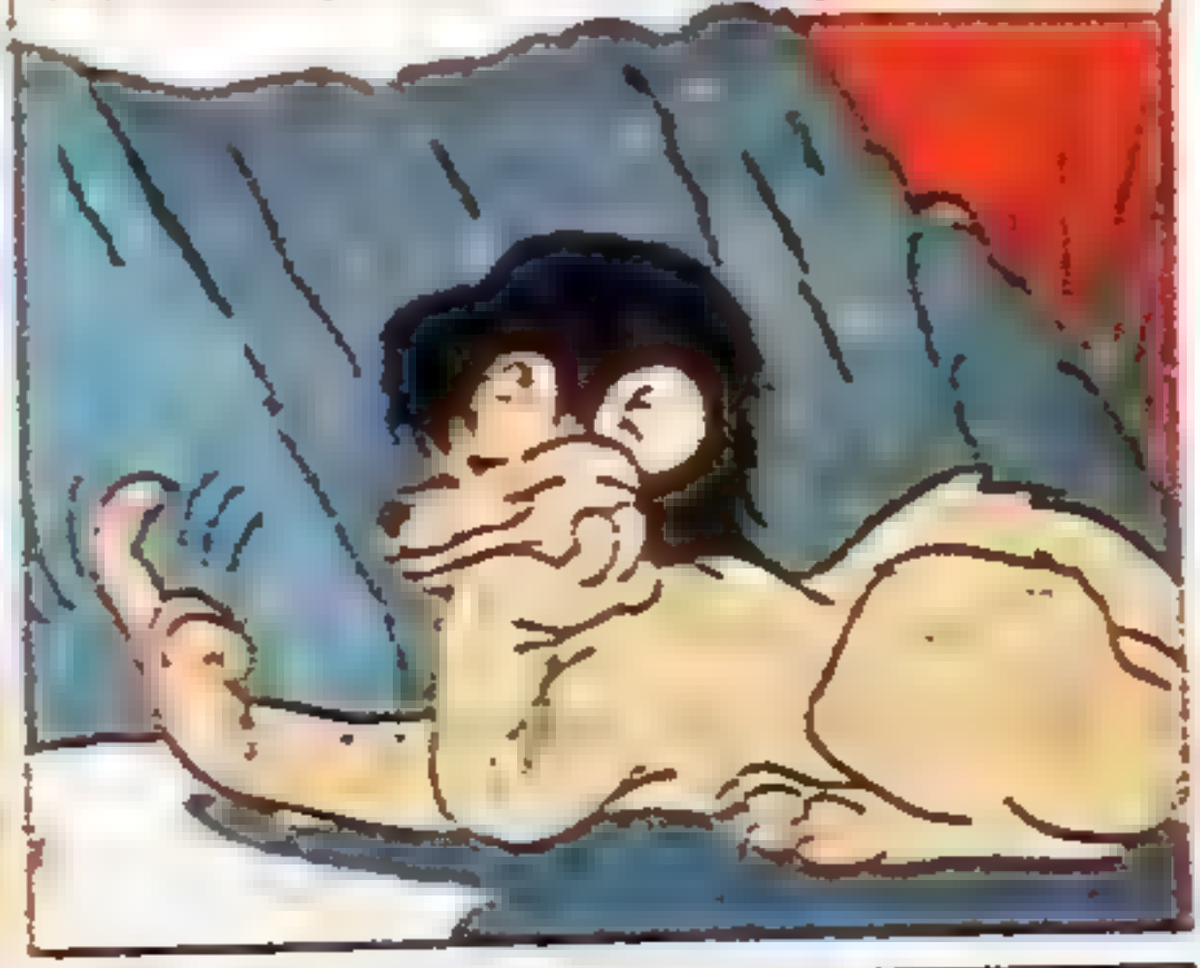
INKY DOESN'T STOP TO ANSWER. HE ZIPS INTO THE CAVE AND THE LION FOLLOWS GOOD HUMOREDLY.

OH, WELL, HE'S AS GOOD AS CAUGHT NOW - LET HIM HAVE HIS FUN.

THE LION CHASES INKY AROUND AND AROUND IN THE CAVE, UNTIL INKY FINALLY ESCAPES. QUICKLY HE AGAIN BLOCKS UP THE CAVE OPENING. THIS TIME HE USES GREAT BIG ROCKS, FOR A LION IS VERY STRONG.

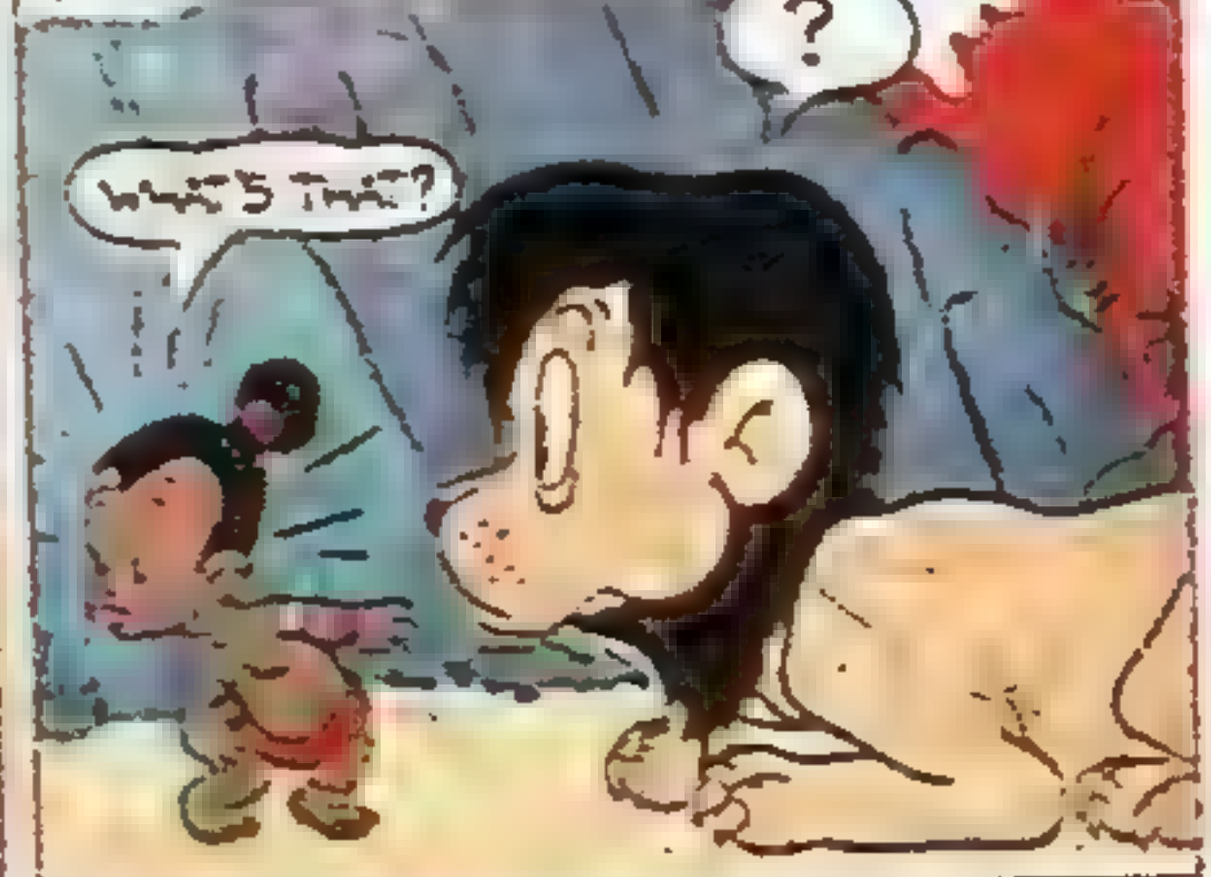


BUT WHEN INKY TURNS AROUND, THERE, POSING TO HIT TO COME AND BE EATEN, IS THE LION!



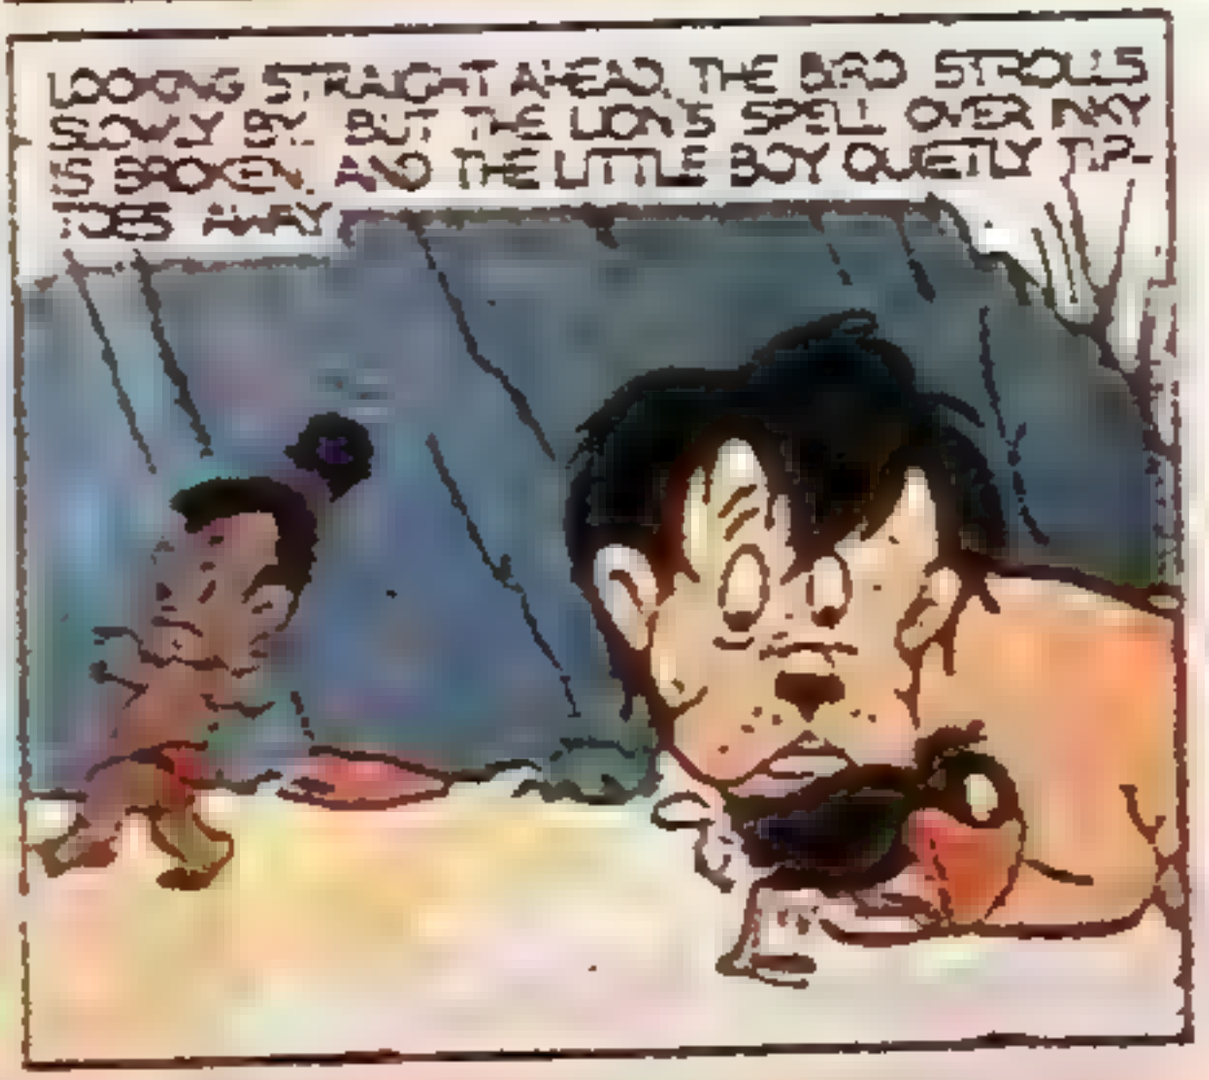
POOR INKY! HE DOESN'T WANT TO BE EATEN, AND HE SAYS SO. BUT THE LION KEEPS LOOKING AT HIM AND LOOKING AT HIM, UNTIL AT LAST HE HAS INKY HYPNOTIZED. AND THE LITTLE BOY OBEDIENTLY WALKS STRAIGHT INTO THE LION'S MOUTH!

WHEN THE ROCKS IN THE BARRICADE CRASH AND...



BUT LO! THE CROW!

LOOKING STRAIGHT AHEAD, THE BIRD STROLLS SLOWLY BY. BUT THE LION'S SPELL OVER INKY IS BROKEN, AND THE LITTLE BOY QUIETLY TIP-TOES AWAY.



BUT LITTLE INKY WAS NOT QUITE FAST ENOUGH AND ONCE AGAIN THE LION HAS HIM CORNERED THIS TIME THERE IS LITTLE HOPE OF ESCAPE.

PLEASE DONT EAT ME I'M AN LION, PLEASE DON'T.

GRRRRR - I'M GOING TO EAT YOU RIGHT NOW!

THE LION CROUCHES - THEN SPRINGS BUT HE IS RUDELY JERKED BACK AND FALLS TO THE GROUND - PLOP! SOMEONE HAS TIED HIS TAIL TO A TREE!

I'M SAVED! I'M SAVED! THE CROW DID IT!

PUT IT THERE, PAHONER - FROM NOW ON, WE IS FRENDS!

HUMPH!

INSTEAD OF SHAKING HANDS, THE CROW SPINS INKY IN THE AIR...

THEN DROPS HIM ON THE GROUND AND, AS SOLEMNLY AS EVER, WALKS AWAY.

OOOOOF!!
